Summary/Review

Nantucket is a 17 year old girl who has struggled for years with moderate depressive feelings, but who has had serious depressive and anxious feelings and a lot of anger since she was sexually assaulted by a neighbor one year ago. In the last six months she has engaged in treatment and her defiance, feelings of worthlessness and wishes to hurt herself have all improved. She has not felt suicidal in the last 3+ months. She reports she still feels bad about herself much of the time, is fearful of passing the house where the neighbor used to live, and is frequently irritable with others. Medication has been discussed but Nantucket and her parents are still reluctant for her to try it. Her family supports her strongly and her parents are less provoked by her behavior, and explosive arguments at home have decreased significantly. Nantucket worries a great deal about her father's continued risk of heart attack. She has plans to attend community college while living at home after graduation. Her successful work history at CVS and her work as a preschool teacher at her church are very gratifying to her and she is interested in studying to be an early childhood teacher. She is very engaged with her individual therapist Sue McDonald and her family are very engaged with me in family work and invested in Nantucket's progress. She also now has a good connection with a nurse practitioner who is experience in working with young women who have experienced assault; we are talking about wrapping up the family work in the next 3 months while Nantucket continues her individual therapy.
